Article Body:

People who are just getting into the acting business have quite a few misconceptions about how

Let's say the producers of a daytime soap called "Sullivan Street" have just gotten a script for

The first thing the producers do is call the casting director they have used for many years and

The next morning all the agents read the "breakdown" sheets to see what parts are being cast.

The casting director then receives all these envelopes from all these agents, and there are tons of

The agents will then call their clients up and tell them about the audition, the time and place.

After this the actress goes to the audition, probably nervous as heck. She'll dress up the way

Finally, she makes it into the casting director's office and does her reading for the part. She

After the audition is over she goes home and waits. In a day or so she gets a call from her agent

She goes back for a second audition, reads the same part again and does even better than the first

Yes, that is the way it goes. Sometimes you'll lose a part because you are the wrong height or
