Home recording can be a fun and rewarding hobby, but it can also turn into a lucrative business.

First off, what do you need? You can spend a lot of money on equipment, but it isn't necessarily

Then you need to look at software. You'll need a good multitrack recorder, a sound editor, and

Once you have your software, make sure it all works together to produce a good quality recording.

One thing you're going to need that doesn't get mentioned often is a good quality microphone.

One thing you DON'T need - an outside amplifier. Musicians like their amps, and tend to insist

Spend some quality time recording and experimenting with effects and arrangements. I learned
