

Title:

Coaching; The Language Of Recognition

Word Count:

500

Summary:

As she rushed through the office, Kacy Dillon, the divisional Director stopped briefly by Ian

Keywords:

employee, recognition, employee recognition, motivation, employee motivation, rewards, staff

Article Body:

As she rushed through the office, Kacy Dillon, the divisional Director stopped briefly by Ian

From time to time you can see examples where managers act as spectators. Their behavior; the w

This image is used to highlight the profound difference between the 'manager as coach' and the Most of all coaching is carried out on a very frequent basis. You don't wait for the big match

The Language of Coaching

Spectator language is full of demands; "Do this, do that, do the next thing." There is no time

The language of a coach is significantly different. First of all the coach is an integral part

Ian Brechin's co-worker, Joanna Collins came to his assistance with the new computer system. "

This is a demo version of txt2pdf v.10.1

Developed by SANFACE Software <http://www.sanface.com/>

Available at <http://www.sanface.com/txt2pdf.html>