The advent of the database is perhaps the most valuable thing that has come out of the computer.

Database technology is simply the storage of material and information in such a way as to increase its utility.

In statistics the more data you have the better your information is that is the less affected by errors.

Consider a database for the items bought in a store in a year. You can know the date and the time of purchase.

The thing that the database can improve now is the speed in which it handles the information.
