Article Body:

I think it was the threat of a Gmail revolution that prompted Yahoo to increase the storage space

I believe that something better came, too. But, something that I'm unlikely to avail myself to Gmail, like Google, was marketed beautifully from the outset. How did they manufacture buzz?

When the hubbub died down a bit I got mine from a friend who works at Google. I admit to all

I had a chat with ConductSearch.com's IT director who, like me, had and disregarded his Gmail

I also learned that others, too, didn't like the way Gmail ^revolutionized~ email. Perhaps th

For starters, email is, to me, about communication. And it's a slower form of communication t

Well, Gmail trashed the perfectly good email format where trash cans and folders ease the burd

It's not a coincidence; Google took a shot at revamping email as we know it and it didn't work
