Article Body:

Handbags are the new shoes, the must have "it" accessory that has all the fashion-istas clamour. Few of you will have missed the fuss a couple of months ago when Sainsbury's sold 20,000 "I'm Not a Plastic Bag" bags. Like cars, most of the more recent designer handbags which sell through dealers and auction houses. Last March Christie's sold a red Hermes crocodile skin Kelly bag for [pound]10,800, this had a long history. There's no doubt that most handbags are being bought to be used, it's not an investment market. Hindmarch's "I'm not a plastic bag" bags are unlikely to make it to "classic" status, they are not. There is a pristine one in the next auction which is estimated at [pound]800 to [pound]1,000 a piece. It's not always about big names, a few weeks ago Ms Minogue was at the shop of Tony Durante, a London-based designer. If you do want to retain the value in your handbag then you should go for one that is in excellent condition.
