Imagine two situations; 1) finding £1000, that is yours to keep with no strings attached and 2)

I'm curious - is there any difference between the value of them? Do you consider one to be worth more than the other?

Are they different to you in some way? You can do exactly the same thing with them. I wonder if you would.

My point in all this questioning is that if we only value the 'things' that we have to work hard for, we are missing out on a lot of opportunities.

The secret of success is to consider this all in two parts:

1) the value of it - that is how well it meets your needs, not just monetary value. This applies to both situations.

2) the recognition of the achievement in attaining it. Some things can be harder to acquire than others.

You see, it is worth the same whether you had to acquire new skills or resources to get it or not.

How about if, from now on, you recognise what you have for what it is worth and separately for what it costs to get it? When you see yourself making these changes and getting different results be sure to thank yourself.

Enjoy getting richer!
