Gold: A True Barometer Of Public Confidence

Article Body:

Gold and silver coins, the famous "old world" currency, are fast becoming the "new world" currency.

Today, Americans are facing a pile of unpaid debts. At the helm is a new Fed chief, Ben Bernanke.

The Wall Street Journal recently published an excellent commentary, "In Gold We Trust," by David * Gold is the benchmark for the value of the dollar - not the other way around.

* The falling U.S. dollar is largely being ignored by Washington and Wall Street.

* Gold's sharp rise represents an equally sharp decline in investor confidence.

* Gold is the barometer of public confidence in paper money.

* The dollar's collapse of 60 percent since 2001 is a blow to capitalism.

Bottom line: The U.S. dollar is slowly but steadily sliding into oblivion, taking with it the Most Wall Street pundits view gold as just another commodity, which they say is now overpriced.

Gold is rising because it is real money. The solution is to convert a portion of your "paper"

Rising gold prices today are a big red flashing signal of coming inflation, which could take
