I grew up in a tea farm about 20 miles from Taimu Mountain in eastern Fujian province of China

I spent most of my early childhood in a tea farm with my parents and three brothers and a sister

The farm is very large with two separate locations on two different mountains several miles apart

As a kid, I went to the tea garden with my mother and other women to pluck the tea leaves during

After tea leaves were processed, some of them became broken. The broken pieces need to be separated

Our farm was not a tea refinery where teas are further processed and packaged for final distribution

I moved to my home town about 30 miles away to live with my grandparents and to attend school

Chinese people recognize tea as one of the seven necessities of living. Every family, poor or rich

I came to the states at the end of 1990 as a graduate student. Since then I have joined millions

Tea takes me home each and every day with its refreshing and reflective aroma and taste, even
