

Title:

Abraham Lincoln's War Of Emancipation Against Depression

Word Count:

593

Summary:

This article is about the psychological problems of US President Abraham Lincoln, who, at that

Keywords:

depression, overcoming depression, stress and anxiety antidepressant prescriptions, counseling

Article Body:

It is said that the true measure of a man is not seen in times of victory, but in moments of g

In his book entitled, The Inner World of Abraham Lincoln, the author Michael Burlingame

Overcoming depression, it can be argued, was Lincoln's greatest feat as a human being

In 1832, he lost his job and was defeated in his first attempt to win a legislative seat. The

In 1835, his fiancee died, which then made him suffer from a nervous breakdown.

In 1838, he ran for Speaker of the Illinois State Legislature and lost.

In 1843, he again ran for Congress but failed to get nominated. Four years later, he again tr

In 1854, Lincoln tried his hand at running for the Senate and, again, he lost. Two years late

And even when he was elected 1860 as the 16th U.S. President, he faced a country that

With all the stress and anxiety that he has gone through, it is no wonder that Abraham

How many sleepless nights did he have almost endlessly pacing his room in deep thought

During Lincoln's time, the medical and scientific community still had no name for mania

Indeed, during the nation's darkest hour, Abraham Lincoln was able to ride above the s

This is a demo version of txt2pdf v.10.1

Developed by SANFACE Software <http://www.sanface.com/>

Available at <http://www.sanface.com/txt2pdf.html>