Article Body:

Alcohol addiction is a crippling and debilitating disease that takes its toll both mentally and physically.

The liver, the largest organ in the body, is essential for proper health and bodily functions.

Cirrhosis is often synonymous with chronic alcoholism, and alcohol addiction is one of the major causes of this disease.

Bruising and bleeding can also occur as a result of the liver being unable to continue regular functions.

Alcohol addiction is a serious problem but luckily, one that is also highly treatable with proper medical attention.
