Article Body:

A head lice infestation is one of the most uncomfortable health conditions to cope with, in addition to the physical discomfort, it can also be embarrassing. One of the most important steps you can take as a precaution against a head lice infestation is to be diligent.

Head lice do not discriminate when it comes to whose head they choose to take up residence on. Once this concept is understood, you can then tackle the preventative measures that will need to be taken. If you have school aged children, it is essential that you examine their head on a regular basis.

Talk to your children about not sharing personal items with other children at school, such as hats, hairbrushes, and combs. If you become aware that someone you, or your children has frequent contact with has become infested, you should be diligent.

The most important thing to remember about avoiding a head lice infestation is to be diligent, and to take preventative measures.
