I can't begin to relate how rewarding it is to have a solution driven mindset. This is the man

Some of you may know it better as "no excuses", but I see no reason to be harsh about it here.

This mindset can be summed up as follows:

- If you have a problem, find a way to fix or mitigate it.
- If you see a problem coming, find a way to avert it.
- If you fail to accomplish something, figure out why so you don't fail again.

All well and good, but how do you solve problems? The first and foremost way is with learning.

The second is to act. Knowing the solution does you no good if you don't do something with it.

Last, remember that problems don't get solved by any of the following:

- Ignoring them: Problems don't exist only in your mind. They can hurt you even if you don't w
- Giving up and making excuses: If you can't solve a problem at first, don't give up. You can
- Allowing a problem or failure to overcome you: Problems and failures happen. It's a fact of
- Not averting them: It's a blessing when you can see a problem coming, although I know it cau
- Panic: It's worth mentioning this one a second time. I've actually seen former supervisors d

I highly encourage those of you intending to start your own online business to develop a solut
