Take a minute to give some consideration to your most recent camping experience. What sticks o

There are famous instances of people keeping journals throughout time. Of course, Anne Frank's

A good camping journal combines a number of characteristics. First, it should be compact so yo

1. Who you went camping with,
2. Where you camped and if you enjoyed it,
3. Who you met and contact information for them,
4. The geographic and weather conditions, and
5. Any unique things that occurred while camping.

At the end of the camping trip, you should be able to get the following from your journal:

1. Contact information for other campers and people you met,
2. Enough detail to provide you or a friend with a guide if you camp in the location a second
3. Memories to reflect upon years later, and
4. Something to pass on to your friends, children and grandchildren.

To get the most out of your camping journal, you should write in it during while you're campin

Camping is a great way to commune with nature. Make sure to preserve the experience.
