There are a few things to consider when you are trying to determine the worth of sports memorabilia.

While autographs do increase the value of your memorabilia there are properties about autographs that you should know.

The most important thing to look at when determining the value of an autographed piece of sports memorabilia is the player.

It is great to have an autographed program from the football game you attended last fall, but it's not the same as having an autographed jersey.

Another important factor in determining the worth of autographed sports memorabilia is the item's condition.

The most important thing to remember when placing a value on sports memorabilia is to leave some room for error.
