Article Body:

I think everyone would remember a while ago when Rasheed Wallace either wasn't talking to reporters

To the common folk it might seem like Wallace doesn't care about his teammates but for us NBA fans

Wallace as an Olympian comes to mind with the sudden rush of NBA players to play for the 2008 Olympics. Allen Iverson said he wants another chance; so do Paul Pierce, Baron Davis and Carmelo Anthony.

There has been a burst of publicity lately that Iverson is a changed, respected, responsible man.

That brings us to Anthony, he is putting up quite a scoring season and hit his second game-winning shot. Anthony is a remarkable offensive talent, and has had a career full of embarrassments already.

The next Olympic team could do without all of them, especially because there are enough excellent players.

The problem is big men. Tim Duncan, Kevin Garnett, Shaquille O'Neal and Jermaine O'Neal are not.
