The California Schools created the California Schools Recognition Program in 1985. Its purpose

To be considered for the award, California schools must meet a variety of eligibility requirements.

The program alternates awards yearly between the elementary and secondary California schools.

California schools that meet the requirements complete an application and submit it to a team.

Those California schools selected for the Distinguished School Award are honored at a statewide ceremony.

In 2006, a record 377 public elementary schools were honored with the California Distinguished School Award.

The 2006 California schools awardees were chosen from 190 school districts in 40 counties. The
