Article Body:

An organization dedicated to ending world hunger has found that goats may be the answer to giving

Since 1944, Heifer International has provided resources to millions of poor families around the world.

Recipients then promise to "pass on the gift" by donating their animal's offspring to other families.

While Heifer supplies all kinds of animals, its annual "Kids to Kids" campaign focuses specifically on goats.

Heifer has found that goats have everything necessary for a child to grow up healthy. They produce milk.

Nanny goats often have two to three kids a year. As the herd multiplies, families are able to support themselves.

Surprisingly, investing in a goat and in agricultural training for a poor family costs less than a cow.

Thanks to Heifer's gift, Biira went from severe poverty and hunger to having the health and education of his children.
