When disaster strikes, why does law and order break down almost immediately ?

Whether it is a natural or man-made event, why do the people in the vicinity suddenly act as though

Could it be that laws are only tolerated and functional in a society when everything is peaceful

When the World Trade Center towers collapsed and the streets were full of dust and panic, did

The only possible explanation is that laws do not apply equally to all people and do not apply

Why doesn't the law itself enshrine exceptions eg "It's illegal to steal a bus, but we'll turn

Are citizens assumed to be intelligent enough or cunning enough to know when a law doesn't apply

Survival requirements, poverty, and a desire to acquire possessions, in combination with a red
