

Title:

Rozier's Orleans Diary

Word Count:

847

Summary:

An account by the author of his relations with the French people, the administration. His cont

Keywords:

france, french, europe, travel, holidays, french politics, sarkozy, fifth republic, french cuisine, fre

Article Body:

At the café

They are to be found at the far right hand corner; perhaps two or three, perhaps seven or eight

There is Eugene, very spry, served as a volunteer in the French war in Indochina. He likes wom

There is Michelle, who talks little and Nicole who says even less. Ah! but there is Jacquelin
I am the only foreigner. They collectively don't have enough English to read the first sentenc

Maybe one or two have a computer, none use e-mail, internet or blog. Most are retired, a few

We have our favourite waitress. She is pretty and young and always smiles and makes us feel we Today is the great day. The day when France collectively stops smoking at the working place. M

In my mother's old village of Milverton in Somerset, England, there wasn't a single baker's. I

I have five baker's within walking distance of where I live. The best and my favourite is with

The other day I had bought a baguette and on the way home it broke in two. It was very fresh,

They also have I don't know how many different kinds of bread, one dozen, two dozen? All shape

My friends in the café are always willing to talk about food, which ranks with the weather and

There is of course Harry's bread in the supermarket for American visitors. That makes them smi

This is a demo version of txt2pdf v.10.1

Developed by SANFACE Software <http://www.sanface.com/>

Available at <http://www.sanface.com/txt2pdf.html>