1. Located at the Northeast of Caracas, the capital of Venezuela, is Margarita a Caribbean island. Being an island, Margarita is surrounded by a host of beaches. So whatever your choice there will be. The mountainous island of Margarita offers tropical palm trees and is a natural, beautiful park.

2. Merida lies in the fertile valleys between the mountains and supports a lot of agriculture. This diversity makes the location very attractive to those interested in wildlife, bird lovers.

3. Canaima National Park, is Venezuela's second largest national park. There are mountain forests.

4. Fishing for piranhas ( and coming home with all my fingers) on the Venezuela's Orinoco Delta.

There is nothing more awe inspiring than walking through the vibrant and alive jungle in a world.

5. The Guacharo cave is enormous and interconnected by narrow passages. The only light source is the cave. The cave is home to the very interesting Guacharo (Oil bird) which is very unique in behaviour. The birds make a strange shrieking noise and it is a good job that you know that it is them as there are far too many tourists in the cave at any time for my liking but this did not take away.
