Any unexpected expenses during your travel abroad need to be preplanned well in advance. Travel insurance is the best way to protect yourself.

It's basically an agreement between a traveller and an insurance company by which an insurance company agrees to pay for the cost of any medical expenses incurred by the traveller while abroad.

Which is the right time to get the travel insurance?

For frequent travelers there are more broad permanent travel insurances that protect you during your entire life.

What happens in case of pre-existing medical conditions?

Anyone with a serious pre-existing medical condition would find it tricky to attain a travel insurance policy.

What all am I covered for in such insurance?

The most common risks that are covered by travel insurance are flight delays, cancellations, lost luggage, and medical expenses.

In case of death, all funeral expenses, benefits of accidental death, will be covered by the insurance company.

If you buy a travel package to a high risk destination, chances are that the policy will already include travel insurance.
