

Title:

Traveller's Journal: Snowdonia National Park - Day 4

Word Count:

403

Summary:

For the first time this week Llanberis awoke bathed in sunshine. The gorgeous weather had stirred

Despite my early start I still could not catch a seat in the conservatory and the magnificent

Keywords:

Article Body:

For the first time this week Llanberis awoke bathed in sunshine. The gorgeous weather had stirred

Despite my early start I still could not catch a seat in the conservatory and the magnificent

After breakfast I decided to explore the hotel grounds. The hotel sits amongst 30 acres of woods

The earlier rain had made ground slippery underfoot; puddles of mud were everywhere making progress

The only noise was the songs of birds dancing in the trees and scurrying in the undergrowth seeking

I soon came to a small fence which I scaled with ease. Once past the fence the land began to climb

Most of the building has crumbled away over time. All that remains now is the castle keep and

The narrow spiral staircase was remarkably well preserved and I began the careful ascent to the top

You reach the top just grateful to still be in one piece, but what a magnificent view. Peering

This is a demo version of txt2pdf v.10.1

Developed by SANFACE Software <http://www.sanface.com/>

Available at <http://www.sanface.com/txt2pdf.html>