

Title:

Book Proposals 101.: What Publishers Want

Word Count:

915

Summary:

Lots of writers like to talk about writing books. You hear very few talking about writing books.

A book proposal is also a great time saver for you because you'll find in the course of research

Keywords:

book publishing, book proposal, writing tips, editing advice

Article Body:

Lots of writers like to talk about writing books. You hear very few talking about writing books.

A book proposal is also a great time saver for you because you'll find in the course of research

Title Page

This is the first page of the book proposal. Your title should be centered and printed about t

Overview

You'll want to have two to three pages explaining the overall premise of your book. You'll also

Bio/Credentials

This isn't just your usual resume stuff, this is a big opportunity to sell yourself as THE per

Competition

The publisher will want to know if there are books similar to yours already out there. It will

Outline

This will be your chapter-by-chapter outline showing what you will cover, point-by-point, in e

Sample Chapters

This is where you get to show that you really can write! You should submit at least three chap

Marketing

The marketing section of your book proposal is so important that many publishers will often re

Promotion

Remember, a publisher wants to acquire you and your connections, so this is another important

Publishing Details

Here you'll detail the length you propose for the book (in words) and whether the book will ha

And that's it. When your proposal is done you might want to hire an editor or a book consultan

© 2005 Sophronia Scott

This is a demo version of txt2pdf v.10.1

Developed by SANFACE Software <http://www.sanface.com/>

Available at <http://www.sanface.com/txt2pdf.html>