

Title:

Speak. Stop. Start Speaking Again.

Word Count:

327

Summary:

Don't be afraid of pauses or long moments of silence when you make a presentation or speech. T

Keywords:

presentation, public speaking, communication

Article Body:

Early on, while working in radio stations, I learned that 'dead air' is a bad thing.

Dead air means silence, unintentional silence, that is. So, if I happened to be standing in th

Speakers and presenters, too, often think of silence as a bad thing. But, they should not. In

Pause for a moment before you start speaking, and you'll almost immediately have the attention

The same holds if you lose the attention of the audience part way through your speech or prese

Pause for a long moment if you want to emphasize a point. When you pause, you not only get the

You'll also find pauses helpful when you change from one subject to another within your presen

Of course, you can also pause when you lose track of where you are in your presentation. Delib

In summary, don't be afraid of pauses or long moments of silence in a presentation or speech.

This is a demo version of txt2pdf v.10.1

Developed by SANFACE Software <http://www.sanface.com/>

Available at <http://www.sanface.com/txt2pdf.html>